What in the World is That? A Review of Clinical Oral Pathology

In today's practice, the dentist, hygienist and assistant play an important role in recognizing diseases and disorders of the oral and paraoral areas. This course will consist of a well-illustrated discussion of a variety of important mucosal lesions that the dental team is likely to encounter in daily practice.

At the conclusion of this presentation, attendees should be able to:

- Differentiate between some of the common oral lesions that are seen in the dental office and describe some of the common treatment modalities
- Differentiate between herpes and aphthous
- Develop a differential diagnosis of some bothersome vesicular/bullous lesions
- State reasons why oral cancer incidence and survival statistics have not significantly improved in several decades
- List the most common risk factors/behaviors for oral cancer
- Describe how to determine which precancerous oral lesions will transform into carcinoma
- Diagnose and treat lichen planus
- List the effective diagnostic aids for oral cancer such as the velscope

DR. LANE THOMSEN received his DDS and MS degrees from Loma Linda University School of Dentistry. He currently holds a position at the school of dentistry as a professor of Oral Pathology and chairperson at the Department of Oral Diagnosis, Radiography and Pathology.

Dr. Thomsen has been teaching dental students and dental hygiene students oral pathology since 1970. He also has conducted many postgraduate courses in the field of oral pathology at the Loma Linda School of Dentistry and across the nation.
